Title: From (and to) Russia with love
Author: Barker, Andrea
Source: Library + Information Update; 3 (7-8) Jul 2004-Aug 2004, pp.57-59
Descriptors: Public libraries; Mobile libraries; Setting up; Russia; Volgograd; Overseas aid; UK; Stockton
Abstract:

An account of how Stockton Borough Libraries in the UK responded to an e-mail request from Volgograd in Russia for assistance in implementing a project so set up a bibliobus service. Stockton sent drawings, specifications and other relevant data to Volgograd via a specially constructed Internet link and Andrey Lisitsky of the Volgograd administration visited Stockton to view the bibliobus service there. The author was invited to the launch of the Volgograd bus and was featured (not always accurately) in the media. The service faces great problems because of the vast region but it is of importance in showing recognition of the value of libraries and is proving to be a popular service.

Title: Internet bus Netti-Nysse
Author: Harju, Elina
Source: Scandinavian Public Library Quarterly; (3) 2004, pp.25-27
Descriptors: Library technology; Internet; Public libraries; Mobile libraries; Finland; Tampere; Netti-Nysse
Abstract:

Looks at the service offered by Netti-Nysse, an old articulated bus which belonged to Tampere city's transport service and has been converted to become the City Library's Internet bus. Outlines the current programmes and services being offered, and discusses the future of the mobile service, as the vehicle's age means that a replacement will soon be needed.

Title: Still rolling!
Author: Myllyla, R
Source: Scandinavian Public Library Quarterly; 36 (1) 2003, p.19-22
Descriptors: Public libraries; Mobile libraries; Nordic countries
Abstract:

Reports on the Nordic Mobile Library Festival which was held in Turku in Finland in August 2002. This is an event that has taken place every 4 years since 1990. Reflects the concerns and achievements in the area of mobile libraries as reported by librarians from Denmark, Norway, Sweden and Finland, emphasizing the changes that are affecting this sector of public libraries. Also discusses the technological developments that are influencing mobile libraries.

Title: A remote chance?
Author: Goulding, Anne; Haggis, Sarah
Source: Public Library Journal; 18 (2) Summer 2003, pp.36-38
Descriptors: Public libraries; Mobile libraries; UK; Lincolnshire; Evaluation
Abstract:

Reports the results of a study of Lincolnshire Library Service to evaluate the efficiency of its mobile service, particularly the "one-house stops"; which were felt to be an expensive method of providing library services to a small group of users. One-house stops were defined as those mobile library stops where the inhabitants of just one house used the service. The house could be in a village or hamlet but often were just an isolated house standing on its own in the countryside. The library service wanted to investigate whether there were any other methods of providing library services to the one-house stop clients and the advantages and disadvantages of the current system compared with the alternatives. A case study approach was taken and the area of South Lincolnshire, covered by the three mobile libraries of Deepings, Holbeach and Boston, was investigated. The aims of the project were to identify and evaluate alternative methods of providing library services to the current one-house stop users and to determine the costs of the alternative methods. The costs were calculated for: the current service; books-by-mail; village shop library; extension to the housebound service; and transporting users to the library.

Title: Moving forward with confidence

Author: Brooks, Judy

Source: Public Library Journal; 18 (3) Autumn 2003, pp.66-67

Descriptors: Library management; Reorganization; Public libraries; Mobile libraries; UK; Staffordshire

Abstract:

Discusses the reasons why Staffordshire Library and Information Services reformed its Mobile Library: allocation of time to communities was not related to use made of the service; stops close together serving families with use of a car; stops serving one individual with use of a car; and time spent in communities where use is low prevents expansion of services where there is demand due to increased population. The Best Value Review was undertaken to gather statistical information about the use of the mobile library service and the data was used as the basis for the replanning of the service. The success of the revamped service was seen in the 2001/2002 period, where an increase in the number of items borrowed of 3.7% was achieved.

Other Titles: InfoBUS of the Memphis-Shelby County Public Library & Information Center

Author: King, Bobby; Shanks, Todd

Journal Name: Library Journal (1976) part Net connect (Summer 2000) p. 14-17

Abstract:

The InfoBUS is a completely adaptable, computerized mobile library service established by the Memphis/Shelby County Public Library & Information Center to cater for the area's burgeoning immigrant population. The InfoBUS, which has been operating since September 1999, offers all the amenities found in the system's "bricks and mortar" libraries, including a full range of collection materials and complete Internet access.

Title: Model TLC

Author: Miller, Rebecca

Source: Library Journal; 129 (12) Jul 2004, pp.42-44

Descriptors: User services; Outreach services; Public libraries; Mobile libraries; Old people; USA; Washington; King County

Abstract:

In just over 10 years, the number of people over 65 years in King County, Washington, has more than tripled, lending increasing importance to library outreach on this group of users of the King County Library System (KCLS), Washington. A major part of this service is based on the Traveling Library Center (TLC), a mobile library service using a fleet of large box trucks, cargo vans and a converted Winnebago (the Techlab), an ABC Express van, and an older pop-top van, based at Issaquah, Washington, to serve communities at four locations in Burien and SeaTac, on the western edge of King County, 20 miles distant. The aim of the service is to reach those who are unable to get to the library and the way in which the mobile libraries are organized physically and the mode of operation are described.

Title: Victorian mobile libraries: moving into the new Millennium

Author: Clancy, F

Source: Australasian Public Libraries and Information Services; 16 (1) Mar 2003, p.21-37

Descriptors: Public libraries; Mobile libraries; Australia; Victoria

Abstract:

The Victorian mobile libraries project, resulting in the significant upgrade of the mobile libraries, was based on a single idea: that the people living in remote or isolated places in Victoria, Australia, were not receiving fair and equitable access to cultural and educational materials. While this answer to this was uncomplicated in itself, implementing it was not. It involved resources, planning and cooperation at several levels between government, community and the libraries which would ultimately provide the service.
